A MAGNETIC PLANT.

An Indian Plant That Shocks the Human There has been discovered in the forest of India, according to The Week's Sport, a strange plant, which possesses to a very high degree astonishing mag-metic powers and which is a great source of annoyance to hunters and tourists. It has been named the Philotarea electrica. The hand which breaks a leaf from this plant immediately receives a shock equal to that which is produced by an induction coil. At a distance of six yards a magnetic needle is affected by it and will be derai if brought near. The enery of this singular influence varies with the hour of the day. All powerful about two o'clock in the afternoon, it is absolutely annulled during the night. At times of storms its intensity augments to striking proportions. During rain the plant seems to succumb, and bond its head during a thunder shower. It remains there without force or virtue, even if one should shelter it with an umbrella. No shock is felt at that time in breaking the leaves and the needle is unaffected beside it. One never by any chance sees birds or insects alight on the electric plant; an instinct seems to warn them that they will find certain death there. It is also important to remark that where it grows none of the magnetic metals are found; neither iron, cobalt nor nickel-an undeniable proof that the electric force belongs exclusively the plant.
